NOT TO BE DECEIVED.

Four or five of us were enjoying our last pipe for the night in the smoking room at Craigfallock. We had had a long day's tramp over the moors, and the conversation lay chiefly between Jack Winstanley and Charley Vane. These two had been at Oxbridge about the same time, and discovered that, though they had never met there, they had a lot of friends in common. Of course they began telling each other who had gone into the church, who into the civil service, who was dragging out life at an up-country station in India, who had got shot in South Africa, and who had made a fortune in colored yarns.

"Did you know Merton?" asked Winstanley.

"I think I have met him. Wasn't he a St. Bridget's man?"

"Yes; a tall, pale fellow, if you remember, with a straw-colored hat and a delicate gossamer beard that he never would save off."

"Rather good family, eh?"

"Daresay. He was a very decent fellow, if he was a little straight-laced. A parson now, of course.
Did you ever hear of a visit he once got from a fine old English gentleman, all of the olden time?"

"No. Tell us the story."

"Well, Merton was really a good fellow, but he had been brought up at home—coached at the family recoy; you understand? He never got into scrapes like the rest of us, and in fact was the most irreproachable soul you ever saw. One term, Millbank's eldest sister, a mature lady of some thirty summers, came down to stay with some friends near Oxbridge, and the day after her arrival, wishing to give her dear William a surprise, she ran over to see him early in the afternoon. Of course he got a cup of coffee for her and they were having a pleasant chat in the sitting room, when the scout comes in with a card, 'Edward Manderlay.'

"The gen'man sends his compliments, sir, and hopes it will be convenient for you to see his rooms.
He had these rooms, he says, sir, when he was up here fifty years ago, and he has a great fancy to see them again."

"Very natural, very natural, I'm sure. I shall be delighted, Thomas.
But, wait a moment. Agatha—"

"Will it look odd for me to be here, dear?"

"Oh, no; but, you see, if the old gentleman sees you here he'll be tempted to sit down and talk, and we shall lose all the morning.
Here's the scout's closet. Run in, and I'll bring you a chair. I'll get rid of him as soon as I can."

"The fact is that Merton was so awfully afraid of being chaffed that he wouldn't have had it come to our ears on any account that a stranger had found him entertaining a lady in his rooms. Agatha was rather shy, and very glad to take refuge in the scout's closet."

"Presently in comes Squire Man-delay. A fine, bluff old fellow, something over seventy, a little shaky on his pins, red face, white mutton-cho; whiskers, white hat, tie—you know the style?"

"Happy to make your acquaintance, sir. Hope I'm not in your way. The scout told you, perhaps, that I used to have these rooms—ah!
a good fifty-three years ago—before your father was born, I daresay?
Dear me! How time flies! It all looks like yesterday—like yesterday.
The same old view into the master's garden. Yes, the same old view."
